Making selections An important tool for cropping or retouching an image is the `_selection_` tool. Selecting is a way of telling Photoshop what to do with the image. A selection is a bounding box drawn around the part of the image that you want to keep. Selections and options are discussed in more detail later in the chapter in the section titled, "Selecting and moving objects." Clicking and dragging to select an area is the fastest way to use the selection tool and usually works best. Some people prefer to use the keyboard shortcuts first, though. The keyboard shortcuts are discussed in the section "Disabling the keyboard shortcuts." When you want to add, subtract, or move elements within an image, you select them first, and then you make the changes. Another way to select objects is to use the lasso tool or the magic wand tool. These tools allow you to simply draw around the parts of an object, and Photoshop automatically selects them, as long as you have no other objects selected in the same or different layer. You can also go directly to these tools from the Channels panel, covered later in the chapter, by pressing `Alt+RMB`.

Choosing a preset

Although you have plenty of image editing tools at your disposal, some preset tools come built into Photoshop and help speed up the process of retouching images. You can choose from a variety of tools, including the Lasso tool, pen tool, clone stamp tool, and the Quick Selection tool. Keep in mind that if you already have a layer active, the tool in the Layers panel becomes inactive. You can always return to it by activating it again from the panel (Tools panel), or by clicking on it (the tool icon to the left of the word Layers).

Estimating Preexisting and New Systolic Blood Pressure Upper Limits for Clinical Screening. Abstract We compared 5 preexisting and new systolic blood pressure upper limits for primary screening in healthy Black and White adults. Six hundred and ninety-nine Black and White subjects aged 55 years and older who were considered low-risk (absence of diabetes, hypertension, and stroke) and were not undergoing chronic antihypertensive medication were included. All systolic blood pressure readings were obtained using a standardized protocol. The new (2013 American Heart Association/American College of Cardiology guidelines) upper limits are 130 mm Hg for both men and women, whereas previous (European Society of Hypertension) upper limits range from 140 to 170 mm Hg. The fifth percentile of preexisting limits was determined as a function of age and sex. The 5th percentile of the new limits was determined from regression analysis of the newly published limits vs systolic blood pressure. Six hundred and forty-four subjects had at least one systolic blood pressure reading over 139 mm Hg. A fifth percentile prediction using the new guideline limits was 134 and 135 mm Hg for men and women, respectively. The 5th percentile prediction from the preexisting limits (140 mm Hg) was 141 and 143 mm Hg for men and women, respectively. We conclude that the 2013 American Heart Association/American College of Cardiology guideline upper limit for systolic blood pressure will better serve as a screening measure in Black and White adults. @echo off @echo  @echo   @echo ***
