An epic drama in which the various thoughts of the characters intersect in the Lands Between. Chapter 1: The Legendary Entity and the Broken Goddess The world of Land Between has existed countless times in countless universes. It has almost defied all but a single exception. Welcome to the Lands Between. We are not gods, nor are we broken individuals trapped in our own world. Well, that is false. That is a lie. We are broken. We have known the truth for thousands of years. It is the time now to restore the world. That is the idea. The old concept of world restoration. And for the first time in the history of Land Between, people finally began to be recognized as the creators of Land Between. The Masked Lord was going to return, but the mask that hid his power was mysteriously destroyed. Why? And what was the Masked Lord's true intent? Our history begins with all of this. The Masked Lord. Once, he was the name of the world's greatest god. In fact, he was the only god. We were all humans of various races. In the beginning, the god of Land Between was called "The Masked Lord." There were many different gods. But the great powers that ruled this world were unknown. That is, until the Masked Lord came. Long ago, the Gods who created the world of Land Between created a single world. The world was then divided into several worlds. What's the reason? I have a hive table which its first two partitions are created using regular definition and the last partition is created using a regex definition. The first two partitions are created without any problem. However, the last partition always occupies the same amount of space. It seems, there's some empty space to be used and it never goes back. The last partition is always identical. In a moment when I view the table, its status in hive is shown as: Has another partition with a bad size? I'm using hive version 2.0.0. (Just for future reference.) Thank you. A: Hive automatically creates 4K (or 32K) partitions for a table. If you view the table size with describe table, you'll see the size of the partition that is currently active. For a regular partition (even defined via regex)
