We sat down with FIFA technical producer Lee Sharpe to learn more about the enhancements made to the engine, gameplay and in-game player performance. Tell us a bit more about the upcoming roster update with the new kits and rebranded player ID... The new kits are very different to the last release and the player's clothing and kit will have a lot of different appearance and attributes depending on what type of player you are; for example the goalkeeper will look quite different if they're wearing a pair of hand-made gloves versus the usual, heavily-branded, plastic gloves. Also, certain types of clothing like, for example, a shirt that's mainly designed for action play will be designed in a way that you can see the impact, for example when you hit someone, or an impact that you make on the ground, instead of looking at our standard player model. And the player ID (Player ID) will have a new ID number added to their model and a new kit, to ensure that, when you choose your team you can see what type of player you're getting, that you see what that player is really trying to do and how they're performing on the pitch. We've also made it more important for fans to be able to look at a player's stats in-depth, by being able to easily see what they've achieved, how they've been performing for a team and, for example, what their key performance indicators are that are designed to make it easier for fans to find players that they want to watch. Overall, we've really focused on making sure that we've got a pitch-side experience that's really good, knowing that fans are going to want to go on that experience, in and around a stadium, and be able to see and know what is really going on on the pitch. With the new kits, you've made a nice link between the new kit and the player ID, but what about the older players who still want to wear the old kits, is this an easy update? It's all done on the back-end, in fact all the old kits still exist, they still have their specific types of attributes, like the older kits didn't have the kind of lighting effects, so if you look at the older kits, there isn't quite the same
