I would like to have a.sh file which basically does: sleep 10 echo hello It would be cool if I could open this file in Vim. I could do something like this: :e script.sh This works, but the script.sh is not viewed with Vim. The question is: How can I make Vim view the.sh file? A: You can use :source [scriptname].sh to source the script and view it with Vim. A: To open the script edit-mode with vim: :e /path/to/script.sh to exit vim: :wq A: The other answers are fine, but I find the way to do it a little more convenient. I prefer to use the `fc` command to open my shell scripts. `fc ~/projects/shellscripts/script.sh` Then you can either use the Vim text editor with: `:e ~/projects/shellscripts/script.sh` Or use Vim's built-in mapping support: `:nmap :e ~/projects/shellscripts/script.sh` which maps F2 to execute the script. Then you can exit Vim using: `:q!` The present invention relates to a connector, a card-type connector with an elastic member, and a card-type connector assembly. An electronic device such as an information processing device has a card-type connector for connecting a card-type connector with a card inserted therein. For instance, a card-type connector includes a contact which has a contact part that contacts a contact of a card, and a locking part that locks the contact part to the contact (see Japanese Laid-Open Patent Publication No. 2011-139322). A card to be inserted into the card-type connector is temporarily held in a connector housing. The card is inserted into the connector housing while the locking part
