Publisher: 11 bit studios, 343 Industries, Deep Silver, 13th Floor, The Chinese Room, SIS and Asobo Studio Year of Release: 2015 Developer: This War of Mine: Stories This War of Mine is a tactical first-person survival game that takes place in a fictional, post-apocalyptic city. Its characters are survivors of a war who are trying to find a way to live together despite all they have been through. The player takes the role of those survivors, observing, talking, and playing a story that unfolds around them as they try to remain alive in the city. Download link: Pace Coming Soon Review By Peroni Nastia Image Taken from official website: This story starts with you as a radio-operator, broadcasting in the middle of a war. You are just trying to survive. The darkness and the silence start to slowly creep in and the civilians around you are fighting for their lives. Soon enough, we see a glimpse of hope: You receive a call from someone that says they know a way to leave the city. Their message is very brief and a few days later you are sent out to find them. When you arrive you realise they were found already. Two people, from opposite sides, agree to meet face to face. After the meeting both people leave the city. You are left to think: Was the meeting a trap, or did it really happen? What happens now? This war story unfolds like a normal, real life story. However, this is very much a war story and is one of the best parts of the game. Your choices will shape how the story unfolds. As a radio-operator, you can pass on bits and pieces of information from the radio. You can hear from both sides of the conflict and the story that unfolds is not only fascinating but also very interesting. You have the option of choosing how much information you pass on, whether you lie or not and whether you reveal the true identities of the people around you. The rest of the game is a nightmare. As your story unfolds you realise how the war has affected the people around you. We see this from many diverse perspectives. We see that the lack of food has made people aggressive. We see that not knowing how you are going to survive makes you lose faith in your own capability. We see that the city is very chaotic and the people often do not have time to
