Shop with confidence.Q: Segmentation fault with file pointer when iterating through external file I am trying to convert a file to a delimited file, where the first delimited column contains the complete header row and the next delimited column contains a complete data row. The header row and data row are being passed through the ostream and istream for output and input respectively. To simplify the usage of the class, the.csv will be contained in the class file, and it will be called later in my main file. I am using g++ -Wall to check for warnings. I have iterated through the.csv file using ifstream and have read the header row, however, when I try and iterate through the.csv again using a for loop, I get a segmentation fault, which isn't the case when I iterate through the.csv using a simple array access. Why is this happening?

#include "DataInput.h" #include #include #include using std::string; using std::istream; using std::ostream; using std::cout; using std::cerr; DataInput::DataInput(void) { m_headerRow = "test_file"; m_headerRowFull = m_headerRow; } DataInput::~DataInput(void) { } void DataInput::openStream(istream & stream) { m_stream = stream; } void DataInput::closeStream(ostream & stream) { m_stream.flush(); } string DataInput::getHeaderRow(istream & stream) { m_headerRow = m_stream.get(); return m_headerRow; } void DataInput::openDataStream(ostream & stream) { m_stream = stream; } string DataInput::getDataRow(ostream & stream) { m_stream.clear(); m_stream >> m_headerRow; return m
