One of the most popular and requested features has been the ability to easily select a portion of a photo you're currently working on, and make the rest of the photo the background. With the new Background Removal tool—activated by tapping on the selected background and pushing the Delete option—you can quickly sweep the selection over a photo without using your mouse or other tools. Then, relaunch Photoshop with the image to have the background removed. Being able to quickly sweep over an image to see the results before scrubbing is a huge time saver. In this shot, I've created a masked comp with the image below the marquee. This comp is a perfect screen capture for a slideshow creating a unique display of a subject. Then pushing the Delete key feels just like working in zero gravity. Airy, right before I'm about to release my pen; I love the effect. The background is gone. Now I've got a perfect screen capture.
